DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-8 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Giobbi (US Patent 6,749,510).

In regards to claims 1 and 5, Giobbi teaches of communication game equipment that comprises a centralized gaming system comprising a plurality of servers which include a master game server, a game execution server, and a database server. The centralized gaming system is used to serve a plurality of gaming equipment units. The master game server stores the games that are available for play, the game execution server processes the instructions for the play of the game, and the database server acts to collect game activity data (2: 38-51). It is obvious to one skilled in the art that each server inherently includes a processor that is used to perform the objectives of the individual server. The game execution server and the database server comprise a communication sub-system since this sub-system is used to communicate with the gaming machines. The sub-systems are also in communication with a shared memory that is accessible by the main CPU and the sub-CPU of the communications subsystem

(3: 30-35). The communication sub-system further has components to manage task functions of the gaming process (3: 55-67).

In regards to claim 2 and 6, the communication game equipment of Giobbi teaches of the communication tasks of the subsystem that involve network server access tasks, which performs data downloads or uploads from a data center (2: 28-50).

In regards to claim 3, it is notoriously obvious to one skilled in the art that a processor, such as the one used to operate the servers as taught by Giobbi, are managed by a real time operating system.

In regards to claim 4, the communication game equipment of Giobbi has a main system and a sub-system that are formed on circuit boards independent of each other (30-35).

In regards to claim 7, Giobbi teaches of a network communication game equipment where a communication task includes providing data to be read from the main system and sent by the sub-system when a synchronization request is issued from the main system of each of the plurality of gaming units and sending the data to the game equipment (4: 33-61).

In regards to claim 8, while Giobbi does not explicitly teach of having a running count of the number of connected gaming units to the central game server, Giobbi does teach of allowing multi-user access to all the different games on the server. It is well known in the art that a server is typically aware of how many users are connected to the server and also which games are sent out where and how many. This is a basic operation of a server, since the server must be aware of how many users are accessing the server so that it can send out the appropriate information to the correct amount of gaming machines.

Conclusion

The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure.
